

The largest class in the history of Wayzata Senior High spent its junior year in hard work and social activities. Many hours were devoted to producing term papers, studying for tests, and planning various activities. The juniors planned and carried out magazine and candy sales to raise money for the annual prom. They pitched in their money during Heart Week, donating the most of all three classes.

One of the noteworthy achievements to come out of this busy year is the literary publication, "I AM." Started while they were sophomores, the juniors continued to contribute short stories, poems and editorials to this magazine which they publish themselves.

The juniors were introduced to team teaching in World History, SMSG math courses, and the hours of hard work which accompany these subjects.

The class of '67 contributed much to the school activities and clubs. It was well represented in the plays and athletics. Soon this class will be faced with the responsibility of providing leadership and success to further the well-being of their school.
